When it comes to programmed assumptions, the heart is definitely not an easy hack. Tulle and Tulips, Book 4 At work, Darci Drummond, aka The Bunny of Bling, shines as bright as her trademark tie-shaped diamond necklace. Her dating life is a bit more tarnished. After getting hurt by a string of boyfriends, she takes solace in helping other women shine on their special day. She wouldn't complain if she found someone to give her a few simple pleasures—and zero strings. Just not that nerdy computer programmer working upstairs. Victor Green's idea of a great Saturday night—any night, really—is a Starbucks and a code-filled computer screen.

Yet somehow, at the relent begging of his baby sister, he finds himself walking the runway at a bridal show where he meets a stunner sporting a tie-shaped necklace. The next thing he knows, he's thrust into a matchmaking scheme with wedding bells in the background.

Tricked into a date with Victor, Darci finds herself embroiled in an affair with a man who's nothing like he seemed. And as her resistance crumbles, she wonders if it's time to let someone get closer than skin deep... Warning: If you're opposed to a man who forgets to clean and a woman willing to tolerate his quirks... Wait, isn't that real life?
