Bethany Miller needs to overcome her low self-esteem and mute the looped recording of her mother's insults playing in the background of her soul. When out dancing with her best friend, she meets a handsome new man. But he has a secret. Dylan Jamison, born deaf, is an avid lip reader. After Bethany receives a phone call delivering the news of her mother's near fatal accident, Dylan stays by her side. Bethany makes a decision regarding her mother that Dylan doesn't agree with and their relationship takes a difficult turn. Will the universal language of love prevail?
