An unsolved murder, like a lost love, never leaves your heart As a child, Tiare Kaihale had a dark and difficult life, made beautiful by the aunt who raised her and her brother. Then there was also the incredible friendship she shared with her best friend, blonde, happy, Sunflower Riley. Tiare and Sunflower did everything together, including being kidnapped when they were twelve. It's a memory Tiare has buried deep. She'd never even told her husband, Detective Pono Kaihale, because of her relentless survivor guilt. Now she can't even look at sunflowers, but suddenly they're everywhere. One sunflower even mysteriously appears in her garden. Then the police arrive at her Maui home one hot Sunday in August as she's catering a wedding brunch for thirty people. Sunflower's body has been found. Twenty years after her precious friend vanished, she's coming home to be buried. Old secrets, terrible ones, rise to the surface, and Tiare becomes the target of the person who thought Sunflower was gone. For Pono, this manhunt is more than personal. It's life and death, and he will risk everything to protect the woman he loves, and to unravel the mystery of a girl named Sunflower.

Author's note: Although this is the third book featuring Tiare Kaihale, this story is a standalone title. It does not need to be read in sequence with the others.
