How can three simple words compel anyone to break their most sacred principles? Kate does just that when she mixes business with pleasure. Dylan has wanted her since he could remember. With his odd behavior and flippant attitude, he suddenly determines she is the future he has been looking for. Skirting the line of no return, Kate is overcome by fear, questioning herself and her principles. Can she pull back in time, saving herself for her own destruction? Or will Dylan's ultimate request entice her into his arms forever?
